

BIRMINGHAM LOGISTICS FIRM SECURES CONTRACT EXTENSION WITH ALDI

Birmingham-based firm Logtek has extended its partnership with ALDI for a further five years after securing a new multi-million pound contract with the UK's fastest-growing supermarket.

Logtek has worked with ALDI for more than ten years, helping to deliver around 1.2million items to ALDI stores throughout the country each week. As part of the new contract, Logtek will manage more than 67 million RTP trips to ALDI's stores to ensure shelves are continually stocked.

Logtek employs a team of 120 people from its hub in Quinton Business Park and its network of depots throughout the country, including four members of staff as a direct result of their partnership with ALDI. The new contract will enable Logtek to offer further employment opportunities over the next five years.

Scot Cull, Contract Manager at Logtek, said: "We've forged a successful working relationship with ALDI over the past decade and we're pleased that we are able to increase our team as a result of this contract extension

"This contract provides us with long-term security and gives us the confidence to continue investing in the business."

Mike Booton, Corporate Logistics Manager at ALDI UK, said: "The work the Logtek team put in behind the scenes helps us to ensure that we have excellent product availability in all our stores. This level of support from a local supplier has been essential as we've expanded our head office this year and are moving even more products through our Atherstone distribution centre."

Earlier this year, Aldi completed a 150,000 sq ft extension to its Warwickshire head office, including new facilities such as a state-of-the-art development kitchen where ALDI's UK-based Buying can create and test new products.

ENDS